Within weeks of launching his website- www.urinetherapy.in, in April, 2013, total number of visitors to the site reached 14,000. The number came to 38274 by September. If the flow of visitors is any indicator of the increasing acceptability of this yet-to-be-medically-recognized 'natural' method of treatment using 'clean human urine' then Jagdish R Bhurani- a retired businessman- may have already won an important battle against mind-set . But it is easier said than actually done.

Sitting at his basement office in Galaxy Plaza complex in Bangalore's crowded Majestic locality and surrounded by portraits of gods and goddesses, the 70-something Bhurani told greenlocality.com that he himself and many others who come to meet him, phone him and send him thanks mails from abroad and not to speak of the list of his once critically ill patients suffering from cancer and other serious ailments, are testimonials enough to prove the efficacy of the therapy. He said his website gives a complete self-treatment manual and there is no need of anyone to come to him.

"Many come to me with money after having benefited from the treatment. But I don't want any money. It is a free service. But the most important thing is to use fresh secretion. Only after taking a dietary regimen developed by me which yields an odorless water-like liquid that the therapy can be started," says Bhurani, who came to Bangalore from Karachi, now in Pakistan, after partition of India. Today, he is on a full-time mission to propagate the usefulness of the therapy which he claims to have its origin in the Vedic period and well-tested and tried. Last year, social activist Anna Hazare released Kannada version of one of his freely distributed books on urine therapy.

“I have written to heads of medical fraternity, top government officials in Karnataka and in New Delhi, and all those who matter in the corridors of power or elsewhere, including former President A P J Kalam, but I am yet to get any response from them. I say that this is a cheap and easy method of self-treatment, once used by later Prime Minister Morarji Desai as well, but officials say that unless it is tested by medical science it can be allowed to be used an alternative methods of naturopathy or urology.” So For Bhurani, it is going to be long wait. Meanwhile he continues to try and make a pitch for the therapy with supportive letters from doctors from various streams of medicines.
